

And days later . . .

IHL Board Meets Today

I'm heading to Jackson today for the IHL Board meeting. Typically, several members of the cabinet go with me.

Today is special for two reasons. First, our new SGA president, Melissa Cirino will be recognized by the board. Second, the board will (probably) discuss a new model for distributing state appropriated funds. This will have long-range implications for Southern Miss.

Days later we still are not told why Ms. Cirino was recognized by the Board or in what manner she was recognized. More importantly, did the Board discuss a new funding model or not? If discussed, was this proposed model beneficial to Southern Miss, or not? What are these "long term implications"?

Madame President, if you are going to raise important issues (and you should), you should follow through and discuss or answer the questions raised; otherwise, what is the point? Simply mentioning issues in passing does not make you sound like you are in control and working hard for the University; it makes you look like you are between chili judging contests and sporting events to mention on your sorority update blog.
