Waiting for the bridge to dry...

Several people have asked about the state of the Lake Byron Bridge on the Hattiesburg campus. Upon inquiry, I have learned that the bridge has some new, treated wood that needs to dry about a week before it can be painted. Our wet weather of late has delayed the project.

The folks in physical plant want to do the job right so we will be patient and hope for a nice spell of sunshine.

Many problems must be facing Martha and the Domers given this post. Many have questioned the urgent desire to send USM faculty members to surrounding junior colleges. Others would like to know why the Dome-mandated online classes cannot fill this role. Most faculty and staff are interested in enrollment numbers for the fall semester. And yet we get the bridge will be painted when the wood gets dry. Oh well, at least she did not try to rhyme anything this time.
