

Positive and upbeat is one thing, this is another

What is the USM President trying to tell us with her latest installment? Here it is:

A Near Sighting

I almost met Senator Clinton this morning. Joe and I headed out early to get to the depot to greet her on behalf of the university. Unfortunately, she was delayed and I had to leave to catch a plane. Fortunately, the crowds were amiable (at least while I was there) and there were enough Southern Miss folks there to fly the flag.

Is Dr. Saunders trying to say she is more important than a U.S. Senator (and former First Lady) who is running for President?

Where was Dr. Saunders going? What was the pressing social event this time that required a flight with her husband? Will we get photos of this later? Most important of all: did you get to play dress-up again?

Did you recognize these “Southern Miss folks”? Why were they not at work? Did they take annual leave to attend this political media event?

While undoubtedly some people enjoy your blog, Dr. Saunders, what is the point of it? You seldom inform the Southern Miss community of anything except your past outings, and the blog frequently reads like a sorority text message update that many people will need a key to interpret. It is simply not worth that much effort.
